In honor of his extraordinary numismatic accomplishments, the ANA has bestowed its 2023 Lifetime Achievement Award on Wendell Wolka. Wolka has distinguished himself as an expert in the field of obsolete U.S. paper money. A member of the Society of Paper Money Collectors for more than 50 years, he has served the organization for about half of that time as an officer in several capacities, including four years as president. In the early 2000s, he (with Bill Kamb) revived the Ohio State Numismatic Association after a decades-long dormancy.

His principal contributions to the field have been his comprehensive catalogs of Ohio and Indiana obsolete notes and scrip, which have become the standard references for paper money issued by those states. He also writes columns for

Wise to Get Second, Third Opinions on Possible Variety

- What agency do I contact if I think that I have stumbled upon a new coin variation?

It is wise to get a second set of eyes to determine if you have a new coin variety or an anomaly. You might want to start by having a fellow collector or dealer with whom you have a working relationship examine the coin first. Should that party agree that you appear to have a new variety, you may want to consider getting yet one more opinion from another collector or dealer, then invest the money it will take to have a well-recognized, third-party certification service examine the coin. A coin dealer can submit the coin for you, but once again expect to pay a fee for the service. A good place to start would be showing the coin to several people at either a local coin club meeting or coin show.

- How do I know a third-party service won't switch coins on me?

Third-party certification services examine thousands of coins. It would only take one incident to put one of these multi-million-dollar companies out of business. How would they have the proper coin to switch and why would they take such a chance and jeopardize their enterprise by so doing?

- Have these third-party services ever made a mistake in judging the authenticity, grade or variety of a coin they have examined?

Anyone can make a mistake in judgment. Each of these services has experienced experts on staff or available to examine any coin for any purpose. All of these services have each individual coin examined by multiple individuals before a final determination regarding authenticity, grade or variety is made.

- How consistent is the grading used by each of the third-party certification services?

Each of the major third-party services has a standard used when a grade is assigned to a coin. This may be a published standard or it may be examples of a coin type in the grades as were assigned by the service. The bottom line is consistency for which each of these services strives.

- It can be expensive to ship coins to slabbing services. Do you have any suggestions as to how to ship them less expensively?

Each of the third-party certification services wants to ensure they received and in turn you get your coins back safely, with the packages being tracked reliably for security purposes. There really isn't any short cut to the shipping expense when you ship your coins to one of these services; however, you might want to consider sending the coins in a bundle or waiting until one of these services is attending a coin show near you. These services accept coins at these shows, eliminating one of the directions for which you would otherwise need to pay shipping.

- How much damage is too much damage to a coin?

Recognize that problem coins will always have problems. Problems don't go away and may become a liability when you go to re-sell that coin. There are coins that are so rare that damage is unlikely to impact their value, but this is unusual. In general, any detectable damage, be it detectable by using high magnification or being visible to the naked eye, is detrimental to the collectability of that coin.

- Why isn't the Philippines commemorative half dollar featuring Gen. Douglas MacArthur on the obverse not included in Q. David Bowers' book, US Commemorative Coins? Is it because it is a Philippine issue and not issued by the United States?

Due to the prominent San Francisco mintmark appearing on the Philippines 1947-S Douglas MacArthur 50-centavos and 1-peso coins, it could be argued the coins should be included in a book on U.S. commemoratives; however, on "the other side of the coin," it can be argued the coins are clearly identified as being an issue of the Philippines, not the United States.

- Is there any way to tell if a proof 1856 Flying Eagle cent is an original or made by a midnight minter?

It isn't known if the original proofs were made in a special striking. According to Q. David Bowers in More Adventures with Rare Coins, "All of the re-struck 1856 cents were made with proof-like or even full Proof surfaces by resurfacing existing dies." There are 10 die pairings for 1856 to 1858 Flying Eagle cents listed in The Flying Eagle and Indian Cent Attribution Guide. This would include the dies used to strike the proofs.

- Would the value of the coin change either way?

There are specialists who will pay more for a scarcer variety proof 1856 Flying Eagle cent, but most are sold without identifying any die variety.

- How can I tell if my Flying Eagle cent is genuine?

A flattened area in the 1 o'clock to 3 o'clock area of the ball of the "5" is an important diagnostic on all genuine specimens, as is the round serif on the lower tip of the "5" projecting beyond an imaginary straight line down the back of the numeral.

- How can I tell if my 1856 Flying Eagle cent is a proof or if it is uncirculated?

According to Rick Snow in A Guide Book of Flying Eagle and Indian Head Cents, "The majority of the proofs are from the die pair known as Snow-9. These have a centering dot on the reverse under the upper-left serif of the N in CENT. There are other die pairs, but these are rare, and of interest only to the specialist."

- Is there one 1856 Flying Eagle cent variety that is more commonly encountered than the others?

According to Rick Snow in A Guide Book of Flying Eagle and Indian Head Cents, "In general, the die pairs known as Snow-3 are mostly Mint State coins from the original striking period and are easily distinguished by the repunching on the 5 in the date." ◆

Do you plan on buying the 2023 uncirculated Morgan and Peace dollars when they become available?

I will be buying only those options which match products 100 years old. That means no proofs, no gimmick finishes, and yes, no Morgan dollars. For 2023, that means one option only – uncirculated Peace dollar. End of story. The abusive proliferation of gimmicky U.S. Mint products needs to stop.

V. Kurt Bellman
Arab, Ala.

Although I am a Peace dollar collector, I will not buy any of the newly issued ones. I bought the 2021 just because of the anniversary. There is no need to produce these or the Morgans. It takes the allure away from the original series.

Darren Bulinda
Novi, Mich.

Yes, I will purchase them. Not for investment purposes but for their beauty.

John McMann
Warrenton, Va.

I will be purchasing the five different options that are coming. I signed up early January on the subscription option. However, I only bought one of each item hoping that others will be able to obtain the coin for their collection. When I only chose one coin per option, the max limit was three. Since then the overall numbers have gone way up, and so did the new limit. I chose to keep my choice the same. Maybe if other collectors would do so also, more people would be happy.

James Faulkerson
Hillsboro, Mo.

No! How much more can the U.S. Mint squeeze out of the everyday collector? It sickens me the way the coins are priced. We won't be fooled again. Oh, no!

Coach Jennings
Petersburg, Mich.

Probably not. I have signed up for subscriptions for all of them. However, due to the huge numbers the Mint has committed to, they will be a poor investment versus silver prices. Think I will cancel my subscriptions. If I decide I want them, I'll buy them on the secondary market after prices have settled down.

Gary
North Carolina

Heck, I joined the auto enrollment program the day it came out. I may not be able to afford scare date [silver dollars], but I'm looking at something for my grandsons.

Mike White
Lake Dallas, Texas

Absolutely, I subscribed and received confirmation on my order from the U.S. Mint on Aug. 3, 2022. Excited and waiting for their release. They make perfect examples of these

Cars Featured on Indiana Innovation Dollar

Collectors of the American Innovation dollar series have another coin to add to their collection. The dollar coin honoring the state of Indiana became available in bags and rolls on June 26.

The coin's reverse design features a series of vehicles that showcase Indiana innovations from yesterday and today. From top to bottom, the design includes an early style gas automobile, a representation of classic car production and a recent model of an Indy style race car. Inscriptions are "UNITED STATES OF AMERICA," and "INDIANA."

The common obverse design features a dramatic representation of the Statue of Liberty in profile with the inscriptions "IN GOD WE TRUST" and "$1." It also includes a privy mark of a stylized gear, representing industry and innovation.

The year of minting, mintmark and "E PLURIBUS UNUM" are incused on the edge of the coins.

Twenty-five-coin rolls are available in "P" and "D" mintmark options for $34.50 per roll. One-hundred-coin bags are also available in the two mintmark options for $117.50 per bag.

Product limits are set at 8,000 for "P" rolls, 7,000 for "D" rolls, 3,000 for "P" bags and 2,790 for "D" bags. To order, visit usmint.gov/catalog.

Beyond the Mainstream

BY MARK BENVENUTO

What About the First 'D' Mintmark?

Denver was not the big, bustling city it is today back when the Denver branch Mint started putting its mintmark on the nation's coins. For several years, outputs could be described as adequate, but not enormous. Today though that "D" can be seen in plenty of everyday transactions that require some small change. Lost in all this is a much older "D" mintmark, one that almost no one collects. We're talking now about the short-lived branch Mint in Dahlonega, Ga.

Looking back at United States history, it is fair to say that plenty of people have some familiarity with the 1849 gold rush, the location at Sutter's Mill, and the mass exodus of people to a big, relatively unsettled California. In the past few years, there have been articles in the popular press that people today are returning to the gold fields there, since the price of the precious metal has risen to over $2,000 per ounce a few times this year. As far as popular connections, this gold rush is well-known enough that it even has a football team named after it – the San Francisco 49ers. But despite all this, or perhaps because of it, two previous gold rushes in the southern Appalachians have been pushed into the shadows of history.

What is called the Mint Act of 1835 is a Congressional act that authorized the formation of the branch Mints in New Orleans, as well as Charlotte, N.C., and Dahlonega, Ga. The latter two were authorized to mint only gold coins, as a response to the finds of the precious metal in those parts of the southern Appalachians. A look through any of the standard references indicates that the smallest denomination coins pounded out in Georgia were the $1 gold pieces that first came out in 1849, and the largest were the $5 gold half eagles, first issued in 1838.

Before looking at dates and mintages, it's worth giving a nod to the reason why this Dahlonega Mint was authorized, established and built in the first place. The distance from northern Georgia to Philadelphia – where the only mint was located prior to 1835 – is about 750 miles. There were no interstate highways then, no paved roads outside of a city and no way to move faster than a man on a horse could travel. Assuming a person walked 20 miles a day, or rode a horse at a leisurely pace, the Mint was more than a month's journey from the gold fields. That's a lot of walking to get your gold to a place that could turn it into coins. That's also a lot of time to have a target on your back, since the young nation did not have anything resembling the law enforcement personnel and equipment it does today. Clearly, a local branch mint was an intelligent solution to an otherwise intractable problem.

The only gold coins the main mint in Philadelphia produced when the Dahlonega Mint got up and running were the $2.50 quarter eagle, the $5 half eagle and the big $10 eagle, all authorized back when Congress had gotten around to giving the "OK" to any mint and a coinage system at all. The facility in Georgia quickly got into producing the two small denominations but never appears to have produced any eagles. To be fair, at the time, walking around with $10 in your pocket meant you were a pretty wealthy soul. Even $5 was significant.

When it comes to production, we can be polite and say that the $5-D gold pieces saw modest totals, while most years saw $2.50 quarter eagles produced in absolutely tiny amounts. Even during the dozen or so years in which the half eagles had larger mintages, the total never reached six figures. The year 1843 came very close, with 98,452 to its tally; but that's as high as things got. As for the quarter eagles, they never even saw a single year with that high an official number for any of them. Because the numbers were consistently low, all of the "D" mintmarked half eagles and quarter eagles are very expensive today.

In 1849 Congress decided a small, $1 gold piece would be useful, and so the smallest of our nation's circulating gold pieces came into existence. From that year to the demise of these little guys in 1889, there is only a handful of years with mintages that went up into the millions. Those gold dollars with a "D" on the reverse are definitely not in that group. Once again, the folks working at the Mint in Dahlonega got into the game, but from 1849 to 1861 the production runs were always tiny, which mean steep price tags today.

The final "D"-marked gold we need to mention are the 1854-D $3 gold pieces, which are something of a stand-alone coin. This denomination came out in 1854 and survived all the way to 1889. In all that time, though, only the year 1854 saw these gems produced in Dahlonega and only to the tune of 1,120 pieces. As one can imagine, even an example showing some serious wear is going to be an expensive coin, one that probably goes for sale at auction.

Today a person would need to have very deep pockets indeed to try to assemble a full set of these first "D" mintmarked pieces from one of our nation's earliest gold rushes. Even if we were to take the lone $3 gold piece out of the equation, the overall expense would be pretty high. It doesn't take the proverbial rocket scientist to realize this is why the coins of this relatively short-lived facility are beyond the mainstream for most of us. On the other hand, adding just one of the more common dates among the half eagles would be a coin that could become a real crown jewel in any collection. ◆

Presents The Billionaire

The Billionaire states "Do Not Sell Your Coins at Auction!" Why? An auction takes 10-25% or more from the seller and another 15-25% from the buyer as commissions or the bump! It takes 60-90 days to enter your coins in a sale and another 30-60 days to get paid. What's going on here? The Billionaire states: "He has very deep pockets, will pay you on the spot and take care of your collection."

The Croghan Medal of 1835

BY R.W. JULIAN

The War of 1812 was the result of the British refusal to honor the rights of neutral American ships on the high seas. This led to a declaration of war by Congress in June 1812. Until the peace treaty was signed in late 1814, a series of battles on land and sea marked the struggle between Britain and the United States.

Land victories against the British in the east were few and far between, but in the west the force of American arms did much better after some initial setbacks. The situation was so bad in the east that malcontents in New England actually set about to secede from the Union.

In the then-northwestern part of the United States in the early 1790s, Britain had failed to honor the 1783 Treaty of Peace ending the Revolutionary War. It had continued to occupy a portion of what is now Michigan as well as sending agents into other areas to stir up the Native Americans against American rule. In 1796, the British finally withdrew but continued to foment trouble on the frontier by furnishing military supplies to the tribes.

This British interference in the Old Northwest continued to rankle territorial governments, and in 1811 matters boiled over when Indiana Territorial Governor William Henry Harrison marched against the growing menace of the Native American confederation led by Tecumseh. The Battle of Tippecanoe in November 1811 was a prelude to the open warfare that erupted in the summer of 1812.

Harrison's bold thrust against the Native American confederation, though not a clear-cut victory, effectively destroyed the Native American power base, and for the rest of the War of 1812 the rebellious tribes in the Indiana Territory played only a marginal role, though many of the warriors joined the British army as irregulars.

One of Harrison's officers at Tippecanoe was George Croghan, born near Louisville in 1791. A precocious student, he graduated at the age of 18 from William and Mary College in Virginia. Croghan then returned to Louisville, not long before Harrison called for volunteers in the planned raid against the Native American confederation. Croghan was so pleased with his military experience at Tippecanoe that he enlisted in the regular army early in 1812, obtaining a captain's commission because of his earlier experience.

Croghan had help in the rise to prominence in the army over the next few years. He was a nephew of George Rogers Clark, the well-known hero of the Revolutionary War.

At the beginning of the 1812 war, the strength of American arms in the northwest was feeble at best. Not long after the conflict began, British troops crossed into the Michigan Territory and easily captured Detroit. The city was supposedly well defended but inexplicably surrendered with little or no resistance. It was a black eye for the American army, and matters soon got worse.

With the winter of 1812-1813 out of the way, British Brigadier General Henry Proctor mounted an offensive towards Ohio, with the intention of splitting the United States in the northwest. He first attacked Fort Meigs (near present-day Toledo), but stiff resistance by the defenders disrupted Proctor's plans. Leaving several-hundred troops, including some of his Native American allies, to lay siege to Fort Meigs, Proctor pushed on to defeat any elements of the American army that might oppose him.

By this time, the government in Washington realized that strong leadership was required in the northwest, and William Henry Harrison was given a key role in defending this area. He arranged for a fort, named Stephenson, to be built a few miles north of modern Upper Sandusky, Ohio. It was small and cramped, having room for barely 200 officers and men. It had only one small artillery piece and was designed primarily as a defense against marauding Native American tribes.

Facing an attack by Proctor, whose force consisted of British regulars and disaffected Native Americans, Harrison held a council of war at Fort Stephenson. It was decided to build a new fort, with better defenses, a short distance away. George Croghan, now promoted to colonel, was placed in charge.

By late July 1813, Colonel Croghan was well under way in his efforts to build a new fort when alarming news reached General Harrison. The British were making better time than expected and Proctor had pulled his troops from the siege at Fort Meigs to increase the overall strength of his army; it took time for the soldiers to be collected at one point, however, which gave Harrison limited breathing room.

With this new and larger enemy army aiming towards the small American force, Harrison convened a council of war to determine the best way to proceed. It was decided that Fort Stephenson, and any improvements put into place by Colonel Croghan, should be abandoned at once. The fort was to be torched so that it could not be used by the British.

Harrison wrote Croghan, ordering a retreat. The courier left on the evening of July 29 but got lost in the woods and did not find the proper route for several hours. As a result, the orders did not reach Colonel Croghan until late in the morning on July 30.

The new orders put Croghan in a very difficult position. His scouts had found the British columns to be moving rapidly towards him. Croghan could have ordered a retreat, but it was likely that only his mounted troops could have moved quickly enough to escape capture. The bulk of his force was on foot and easy prey for the Native Americans accompanying Proctor.

It was also known to Croghan that Proctor had been unable to control his Native American allies at an earlier battle at Raisin River, when a considerable number of American prisoners had been tortured and murdered by the Native Americans. Given the likelihood that the Raisin River massacre would be repeated at Fort Stephenson, Croghan reluctantly replied to Harrison in the following words: "Sir, I have just received yours of yesterday, 10 o'clock P.M. ordering me to destroy this place and make good my retreat, which was received too late to be carried into execution. We have determined to maintain this place, and by heavens we can."

Technically the answer bordered on insubordination and Harrison acted accordingly when he received Croghan's answer. The colonel was promptly relieved of his command and the responsibility given to another officer, Colonel Ball. The new commander set out at once for Fort Stephenson, accompanied by mounted dragoons, but was ambushed near the fort. The dragoons, however, proved more than a match for the Native American braves, and Ball arrived safely at Fort Stephenson.

Colonel Croghan now left the fort to report to Harrison. Once the situation had been fully explained, Harrison reinstated Croghan in his command. The colonel promptly returned to Fort Stephenson, whose defenses were being strengthened in lieu of building the other fort nearby. Upon his arrival at the fort, he was informed by scouts that the British were very close. Within a matter of hours, General Proctor had arrived in force and retreat was now impossible, even for mounted troops.

The arrival of the enemy proved to be worse than expected by Croghan. Proctor had been able to bring in several pieces of artillery by using gunboats on the Sandusky River, which came close to Fort Stephenson. Croghan had exactly one piece of artillery, a six-pounder which was moved around the perimeter of the fort to give the impression of several such guns.

On Aug. 1, both sides prepared for battle, Croghan having refused to surrender under the flag of truce requested by Proctor. The latter had 1,300 troops under his command, including 800 Native Americans. He also had another 2,000 Native Americans stationed to the west to prevent the soldiers from Fort Meigs coming to the aid of Croghan. The Americans, on the other hand, had barely 200 men and the one field piece.

The opening attack on Aug. 2 saw Proctor bombarding the fort with his cannons, but he also used one of his gunboats to add to the firepower. For his part, Croghan ordered that a hidden gun port be constructed along the line of the expected infantry attack and good supply of nails and grape shot made ready.

The enemy guns did little damage to Croghan's defenses, and Proctor ordered an all-out assault. The first waves were a feint against the south side of the fort, but in short order came the real thrust at the northwest corner, where Croghan had his hidden gun port. As the troops approached, Croghan opened fire with deadly accuracy, killing and wounding more than 150; the Americans had one man killed and seven wounded.

General Proctor now received the unwelcome information from his scouts that Harrison was preparing to march against the British rear. The siege was abruptly broken off and Proctor hurriedly retreated, leaving large quantities of military stores behind. The battle was over and the British never again seriously threatened the Old Northwest.

Colonel Croghan served with distinction during the rest of the war and remained in the army until he resigned his commission in 1817. He rejoined in 1824, serving until his death at New Orleans in January 1849.

During and after the war, Congress approved several gold medals for actions on both land and sea. None for Colonel Croghan was considered at the time, however. In a belated recognition of his bravery, the legislators did approve in February 1835 a gold medal for the defense of Fort Stephenson, the last War of 1812 medal to be awarded.

Within a matter of weeks, the War Department asked Lieutenant Washington Hood to prepare a proper design for the reverse of the medal. (The obverse was to carry Croghan's portrait.) The Hood sketch varied considerably from the other army medals in that it had a Latin phrase, "PARS MAGNA FUIT" (His Share was Great) above a scene of the battle.

Tablet placed at the battle site.

The use of a Latin motto is curious as none of the other Army medals had carried such mottos. The Naval medals did, and perhaps the army was indicating that they understood classical allusions as well as the Navy.

Hood's design was forwarded to the War Department in early May 1835, where it was soon approved, but President Andrew Jackson was also consulted and he viewed the sketch with favor. On May 24, the drawing was sent to Mint Director Samuel Moore at Philadelphia; Moore was instructed to have the dies made and the medal struck as soon as possible. Unfortunately, the matter was overlooked during a change in directorship in early July 1835. Moore resigned and was replaced by Dr. Robert M. Patterson.

Secretary of War Lewis Cass grew impatient when he had heard nothing for several weeks and wrote Patterson on Aug. 24 asking what had been done. The War Department had indicated that Moritz Fürst, who had done nearly all of the earlier War of 1812 dies, was to prepare Croghan's as well, and Cass also wanted to know if Fürst had been located.

Director Patterson soon replied, apologizing for the delay and noting that he had been unable to locate Fürst. On Sept. 4, Patterson again wrote Cass, admitting that he had yet to locate the artist. On the following day, the Mint director wrote Colonel Croghan letting him know what was transpiring and indicating that Fürst, when found, would want to draw Croghan from life before cutting the obverse die.

In due course, Patterson discovered that Fürst was in New York and was able to contact him. The artist arrived at the Mint on Sept. 24 for a personal interview with the director. The price agreed upon for the pair of dies was $1,800. Fürst examined the Hood drawing and said that it could be followed with the exception of the ornamental border. Patterson agreed with Fürst and notified the War Department of the proposed arrangement. It was soon accepted, and on Oct. 9 Fürst was given the go-ahead.

The agreement required the artist to finish the dies by February 1836 but without the responsibility for hardening the dies. That would be done by Chief Coiner Adam Eckfeldt and, if there was a failure, Fürst was to replace the reverse die for $600. If it was the obverse die, there would be no charge. (The latter stipulation seems to indicate that Fürst intended to make a hub of the portrait.)

Fürst began his work with the reverse die in late October 1836 because he had not yet made arrangements with Colonel Croghan for a personal sitting. The arrangement did not work out exactly as planned, however, as it proved impossible for Croghan to visit New York. Instead the colonel instructed his brother in Pittsburgh to send a profile miniature to Fürst. The artist agreed to the proposal by Croghan as the best that could be done under the circumstances.

The artist received the miniature in mid-February 1836 and work went rapidly after that. By late March, both dies had been received at the Mint and Fürst was paid the $1,800 due him.

As early as September 1835, Chief Coiner Eckfeldt had estimated that it would cost about $250 to strike the gold medal, which would include the cost of the gold, the case, and labor.

Although the dies were on hand by April 1836, nothing was done for some months. In January 1837, the Secretary of War wrote to Director Patterson asking why the medal had not been finished given the amount of time involved. The director in turn asked Chief Coiner Eckfeldt about the status of this matter and was informed that the medal would be ready in about two weeks. The War Department accepted this and so informed the president and other key officials.

At this point, nothing again happened and on March 13 an irritated Secretary of War pointedly asked Patterson how much longer the wait would be. On the 16th, Patterson replied that the delay was due to an "excess of caution" on Eckfeldt's part. However, the director was able to report that the medal had just been struck and was being prepared for shipment to Washington.

Within a short time, Colonel Croghan received the honor that was so long overdue. In addition, several of the officers and men who had distinguished themselves in the battle received specially engraved swords.

Beginning in 1861, the Mint struck copper-bronzed copies of the medal from the original dies. The medal continued to be struck after 1901 for collectors but in the so-called Late Bronze finish. The Croghan medals, however, have not been struck by the Mint for some years and at present can be obtained only on the secondary market. ◆

Numismatics and Sports

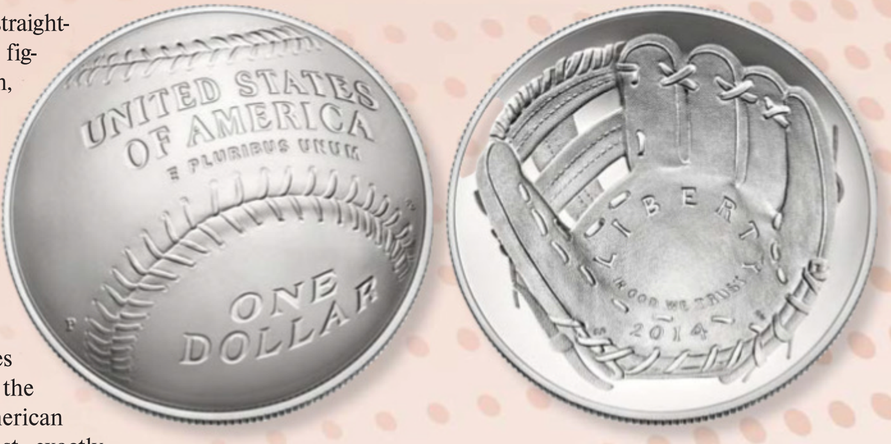
Issues of coins and paper money in the past emphasized honoring the nation or the ruler of the country. That was back when the idea of producing coins and currency was to satisfy the needs for commercial transactions.

Today, mints around the globe are also focusing on producing coin and currency issues to sell to collectors to make greater profits, whether or not they are ever put into circulation.

The U.S. Mint served collectors by issuing gold and silver commemorative coins from 1892 to 1954. It also has produced proof coins since before 1850, and proof sets most years from 1936 onward. In 1982, the U.S. Mint resumed striking commemorative coins, now sometimes issuing them in uncirculated, proof and reverse proof finishes.



2014 silver dollar commemorating the National Baseball Hall of Fame.

Producing coins that interest collectors is not straightforward. It takes good judgment and insight to figure out what themes collectors will want to own, and at what prices. For guidance on what may be popular, one useful source is to analyze the designs created by private manufacturers of precious metals medallions, especially the 1 troy ounce .999 fine silver rounds.

Clearly, classic U.S. coin designs have been popular with these private mints. Hence, the U.S. Mint came out with gold, silver and palladium bullion coins adapting the obverses of U.S. coins from the early 1900s. In 2001, the Mint came out with the extremely popular American Buffalo commemorative silver dollar, almost exactly reproducing the design of the 1913-1938 Buffalo nickel. In 2021, the Mint came out with adapted designs of the Morgan and Peace silver dollars.

Other popular themes include those that are sports-related.

The Highland Mint in Melbourne, Fla., had an active campaign of marketing commemoratives, mostly of 1 troy ounce .999 fine silver, licensed by Major League Baseball, the National Football League, National Basketball Association and National Hockey League.

Having a coin shop in Michigan, a state with rabid sports fans, it was easy to sell commemoratives for the Detroit Red Wings Stanley Cup championships in 1997, 1998, 2002 and 2008, the University of Michigan 1997 collegiate football championship, the Michigan State University 2000 Men's NCAA basketball championship and the Detroit Pistons 2004 NBA championship. There were even 1-ounce silver commemoratives made after the Michigan State University 1987 football team won the 1988 Rose Bowl.

The success of private marketing of sports-related commemoratives was taken to heart by Congress and the staff at the U.S. Mint. Gold and silver commemorative coins were issued for the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, a silver dollar for the 1988 Seoul Olympics, clad, silver, and gold coins for the 1992 Barcelona Summer Olympics and for the 1994 soccer World Cup.

The U.S. Mint went into overdrive for the 1996 Atlanta Summer Olympics, issuing 16 different designs in 1995 and 1996 among clad, silver,and gold coins, each in both uncirculated and proof finishes. That was accompanied by the 1995 Special Olympics World Games silver dollar.

Then came the 1997 Jackie Robinson gold and silver commemoratives, honoring the 50th anniversary of when he broke the color barrier in major league baseball. That was followed by gold and silver issues honoring the 2002 Salt Lake City Winter Olympics. Since then, the U.S. has not hosted another Olympics (though scheduled to host the 2028 Summer Games in Los Angeles) and demand for commemoratives for Olympic Games hosted in foreign cities were not strong enough sellers that the U.S. Mint continued to commemorate them.

So, the U.S. Mint went in a different direction. In 2014 it issued clad, silver, and gold coins commemorating the National Baseball Hall of Fame. To further spark collector interest, the coins were struck in scyphate-shape, with curved planchets similar to some Byzantine Empire gold coins from the Middle Ages.

In 2020, the Mint repeated scyphate-shaped clad, silver, and gold commemoratives for the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame 60th Anniversary. Then last year, the Mint produced clad, silver, and gold coins to honor Negro Leagues Baseball.

2020 Basketball Hall of Fame $5 gold coin.

Sports themes will continue to appear on future U.S. coin issues. As part of the Circulating Coin Redesign Act of 2020, there will be up to five quarters annually struck from 2027 to 2030 with reverse designs featuring youth sports. From 2027 to 2030, the annual half dollar each year will celebrate sports tailored to athletes with a range of disabilities.

Don't be surprised if the U.S. Mint again produces a series of commemorative coins for the 2028 Los Angeles Summer Olympics.

Other nations, including Canada, have produced a wide variety of coins with sports themes. As long as the mints can make profits producing them, look for more sports-themed coins in the future.

Casinos Mutilated Silver Dollars to Combat Shortage

What a craven act – the ruin of collectible silver dollars, Morgan or Peace, it was of no matter – all to keep Nevada's gambling machines satiated. Collectors be damned.

But that's exactly what casinos in Nevada were doing in the mid-1960s when a coinage shortage and, in particular, a silver dollar shortfall threatened their businesses.

"The gambling casinos of Nevada, long the last stronghold of the vanishing American – otherwise known as the silver dollar – are in real trouble, partner," reported the September 1964 issue of Coins magazine. "They're running out of silver dollars for their one-armed banditti and their tables.

"This may seem like a joke to many readers, but it isn't very funny to casino operators who have depended on the cartwheels as a firm and romantic fixture in a multi-million dollar business.

"Not long ago the Treasury Department had millions of the things stuffed back in their vaults – enough to last for decades of normal use. But the recent rush on silver dollars was anything but normal and the casinos have felt it first. Many of them have had to turn their slots' faces to the walls – no coins to put into them. Most casinos now refuse to give dollars in change unless they are mighty sure the person asking for change is playing the machines – returning all the coins.

"'The scarcity of dollars is obviously the work of collectors and speculators,' reasoned the casino operators. 'Let's fix the dollars so nobody will want to collect them.'

"And fix them they did. In several ways. Some have holes drilled in them, some show up punched with identifying marks. Others, after even more brutal treatment, are appearing with their dates ground away.

"All of these approaches to the problem are highly effective, although probably all are just as illegal. The law states that simple mutilation is not enough. It has to be mutilation with intent to change the value of the coin – and this includes collector value as well as face value, according to a recent Treasury Department ruling. There is no doubt that a 1903 silver dollar without a date is considerably less valuable to a collector than it is with a date, besides containing somewhat less silver than it must to pass as United States coinage.

"The West is keeping its fingers crossed for the bill now before Congress which would allow the striking of silver dollars in 1965. This would help alleviate the problem – but, according to most qualified observers, the bill has about as much chance of survival as a snowball in Death Valley.

"Maybe, after all this time, the gambling casinos will have to join the rest of the world and use a token 'coinage' for their operations."

This would happen at at least one Wisconsin bank when it fought off the ill effects of a nationwide coinage shortage and turned to wooden nickels.

"There's been and there still is a tremendous coin shortage," Coins reported in the same issue, as part of its "News and Comments" column. "The Mints can't begin to catch up, to say nothing of keeping up with the demand.

"In some parts of the country the shortage is so severe that banks have been forced to purchase coins from coin dealers and from 'coin brokers' in order to carry on their business. And, of course, nobody in his right mind is going to sell a bank a bag of coins at face. After all, the banks charge a fee for their services. Why not make them pay?

"A Wisconsin bank issued wooden nickels as its answer to the shortage. And the Secret Service moved in quickly, though thanks to the national press not very quietly, and picked them up – all they could get their hands on."

According to newspapers of the time, the wooden nickels, issued by the First National Bank of Monroe, Wis., to quell the coinage shortage, went up in value after the Feds moved in and stopped the operation.

The Rockford (Ill.) Morning Star for June 2, 1964, adorned by a photo of Monroe bank president Edward M. Adams with stacks of wooden nickels on the desk before him, reported that there was now heavy demand for the woods, with some paying up to $11 for the "coins."

"A Chicago-headquartered grocery chain," Coins continued, "threatened to issue and actually went into production of paper currency designed to help shoppers not only in the chain's own stores, but to be passed current in other establishments as well. The Secret Service quickly made their displeasure known and this helpful notion was squashed."

Help was on the way, Coins wrote, quoting from a Treasury Department press release reproduced in the "News and Comments'' column, titled "Treasury to Double Coin Production."

"The Treasury today announced an intensive program to double the nation's current rate of coin production within a year and raise it by 75 percent during the next six months.

"By next June, the program will boost our coin production to an annual rate of over 9 billion new coins – more than double the 4.3 billion level for fiscal 1964 and triple the 3 billion level for fiscal 1961. For the last six months of this year – normally a time of peak demand for coins – the program will mean a 75 percent increase in coin production over the same period last year, a rise to 3.5 billion new coins from the 2 billion produced in the last half of 1963.

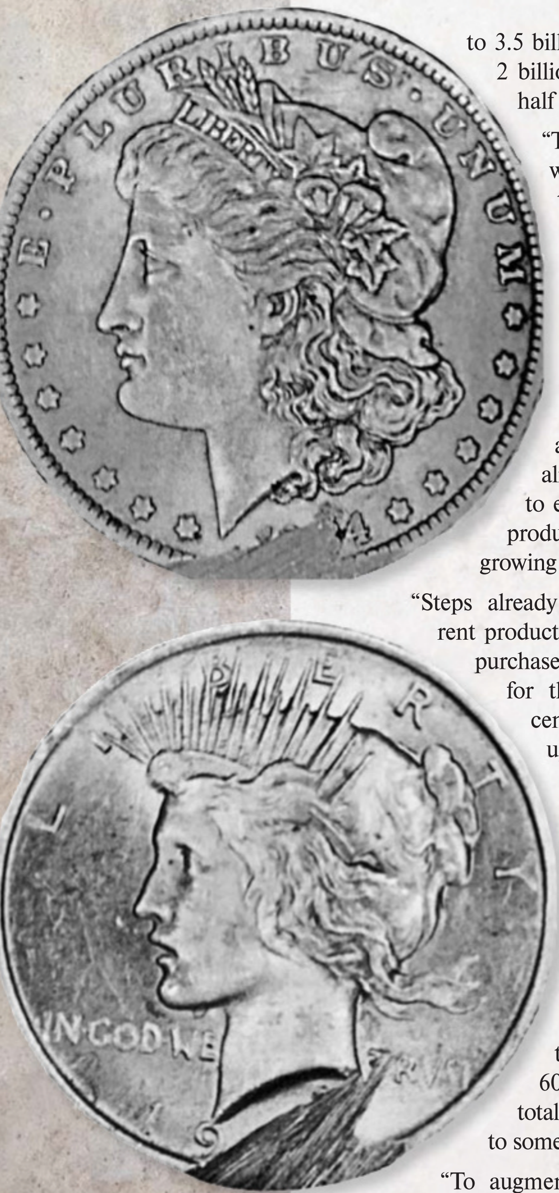
"This increased production will be distributed among the present 5 denominations of coins in about the present ratios – roughly two-thirds pennies, one-fourth nickels and dimes, and the rest quarters and half-dollars.

"The new program will augment the Treasury's already heightened efforts to expand the nation's coin production in the face of a growing need for coins.

"Steps already taken to expand current production of coins include the purchase of rolled nickel strip for the making of all five-cent coins – thus freeing up equipment for other production – and the inauguration of a continuous 7-day, 24-hour production schedule at the nation's two Mints, in Philadelphia and Denver.

"These actions will increase production for the coming fiscal year by 600 million coins, bringing total budgeted production up to some 5 billion coins.

"To augment these measures, the following new steps will be taken:



In the 1960s, casinos took to mutilating silver dollars such as these dateless Morgan and Peace dollars in order to combat a silver dollar shortage

1. Beginning early in July, bronze strip for pennies will be purchased (in addition to the nickel strip already being acquired for five-cent coins), thus freeing all melting, casting and rolling operations for the production of more silver coins.
2. New coin presses (used for imprinting the design of the coin) are being ordered for delivery early this Fall and additional stamping machines, which can be converted for Mint use, are being acquired from the surplus stocks of the Department of Defense, the General Services Administration, and private industry.
3. In December, when current orders have been filled, the proof coin operation (the production of special sets of coins for collectors) will be suspended. Those of its presse[s] that are suitable will be converted to allow higher speeds and will be devoted to the production of coins for circulation.
4. As additional presses become available, production of annealed blanks (round pieces of metal the actual size of the coin softened to take the die) for nickels and pennies will be temporarily shipped to the U.S. Assay Office in San Francisco, thus permitting the Mints to concentrate on the final stages of the production of all coins.
5. The Congress will be asked to continue the 1964 date on all coins indefinitely, thus eliminating any possible incentives for keeping 1964 coins out of circulation for speculative purposes."

Coins magazine's editor was skeptical of some of Treasury suggestions, including the propriety of keeping the same date on all coins indefinitely.

"Will the Treasury actually do the things they mention in their bulletin? Or are they just making threats, trying to scare people to loosen their grip on the coins they have in their attics? Let's look at a couple of them.

"In the case of the Kennedy half dollar, look back to just before his untimely death. The half dollar was an unwanted, unused coin. Most of our cash registers didn't even have a compartment for them.

"Keeping 1964 on Kennedy half dollars will help. But what would help even more would be the cessation of production of an unwanted coin so the machinery could be used for needed smaller change.

"The benefit of keeping the same date on smaller change is questionable. And the thought of Congress taking such action is almost unthinkable. That's one we'll have to see to believe.

"How about manufacturing planchets in San Francisco? It's a natural. The plant remains, the staff is there. Additional machinery will be brought in from outside the Treasury and this will help.

"What about the discontinuance of proof set production at the Philadelphia Mint? First, consider that it will mean a revenue loss to the government. The face value of a proof set is $.91. It sells for $2.10. This alone represents a $1.19 profit. But remember, the coins in a proof set are token coins. Their intrinsic value in metal is nowhere near their face value. So you can subtract another big chunk from the value represented on the face of the coins.

"But this profit would be overshadowed by the impelling need to double production next year. So the disappearance of the proof set, at least for the next year, is just one of the disappointments we are apparently going to have to live with.

"Still another enigma is the Treasury Department's apparent desire to strike a silver dollar in 1965. The bill is before the House after having been okayed by a Senate committee. But it's unbelievable that dollars will be minted. The only function this would serve would be to further slow down production of needed coinage.

"At these early stages in the coin shortage solution planning, nothing is very definite. Except – coin collecting will go on! Not as though nothing happened, but strongly and with some changes." ◆

Unc. Eagles Available in Silver, Gold

There is something new for collectors of both silver and gold American Eagle coins. Since our report last month, the 2023-W 1-ounce uncirculated silver Eagle and 2023 1-ounce uncirculated gold Eagle have become available. The silver sales total comes in at an impressive 113,034, while the gold is at a more modest 4,115. The pieces were issued on May 25 and June 1, respectively.

Rewind to May 15, and half dollars were the name of the game. The 2023 Kennedy halves went on sale in 200-coin bags and "P" and "D" two-roll sets. Since then, 7,554 bags have been sold and 25,933 roll sets have gone to new homes.

Rounding out the new releases since our last report is the American Women quarter honoring Eleanor Roosevelt. Becoming available on June 5, sales totals are 7,901 for the 100-coin bags, 4,005 for the two-roll sets and 12,658 for the three-roll sets representing each mint that produces them.

Big sellers this time around are the 2023-W 1-ounce silver proof coin with a healthy increase of 24,061 since our last report, the 2023 Congratulations set with an increase of 3,771 and the 2022 uncirculated set with a jump of 2,401.

Civil War Era Gold in Recent Hoard Find

By Richard Giedroyc

Any time there is a treasure find, it catches everyone's attention. This includes the general public as well as collectors. The latest such headline-grabbing find is the "Great Kentucky Hoard" allegedly discovered in a corn field. The find is comprised of $20 double eagle and $10 eagle coins all dating from between 1850 and 1862, which could suggest the hoard was hidden during the time of the Civil War. Collectors will take interest in that this group includes the finest known 1863 Liberty $20 double eagle.

While bidders await the sale of the find, this news may encourage even more people to pursue coins as a hobby. Auction rooms are already packed, a sign the market is strong. It may not always be the prices realized that are the most important statistic – it can be how many individuals are participating in the sale. This is true for attendance at local club meetings, local coin shows, and larger bourses as well. With all this remaining positive, at the moment it can be said the coin collecting as well as the coin investing market continue to thrive.

Investors may also be watching the spot price of precious metals since many of their coin buys may involve intrinsic value, but the value of collectible coins, regardless of if they are generally available or rare, continue to hold or increase in value. Investors may also want to consider investing in the few publicly traded numismatic-oriented equities. Within the past month, these increased from 76.5 to 80.9 percent of their 52-week trading prices.

SUTLER,

GOOD FOR
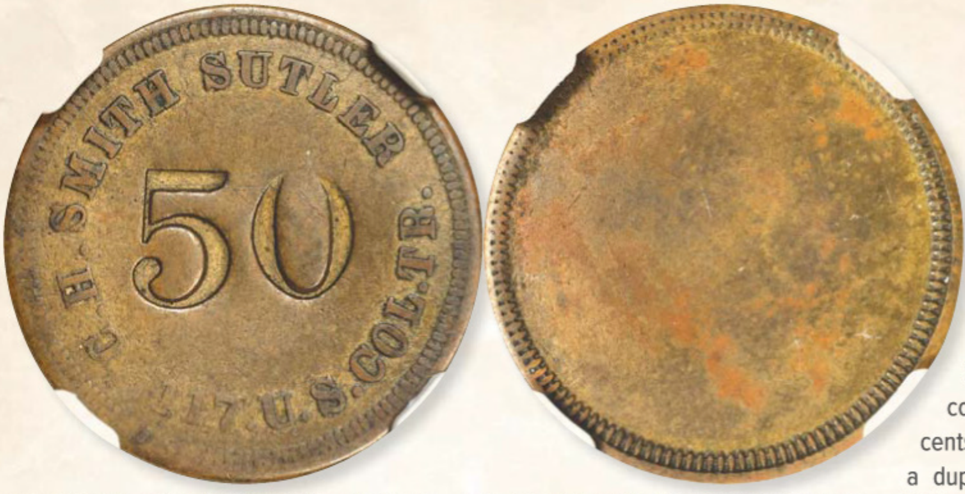
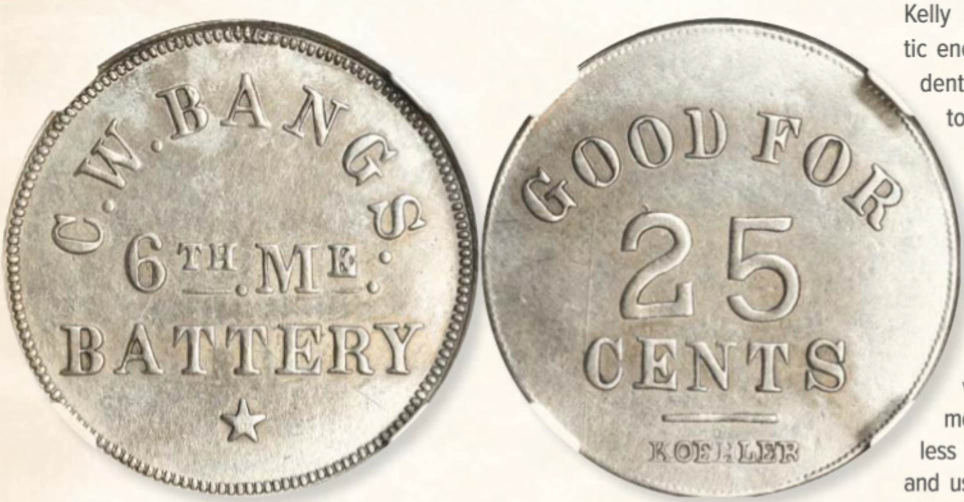
CENTS
IN GOODS.

From Ohio, Camp Dennison, a 5-cent hard rubber token from Ira A. Hutchinson, with just three in the archived sales of Stack's Bowers and only one sold through Hayden, this Rarity-8 token is currently bid at $1,700.



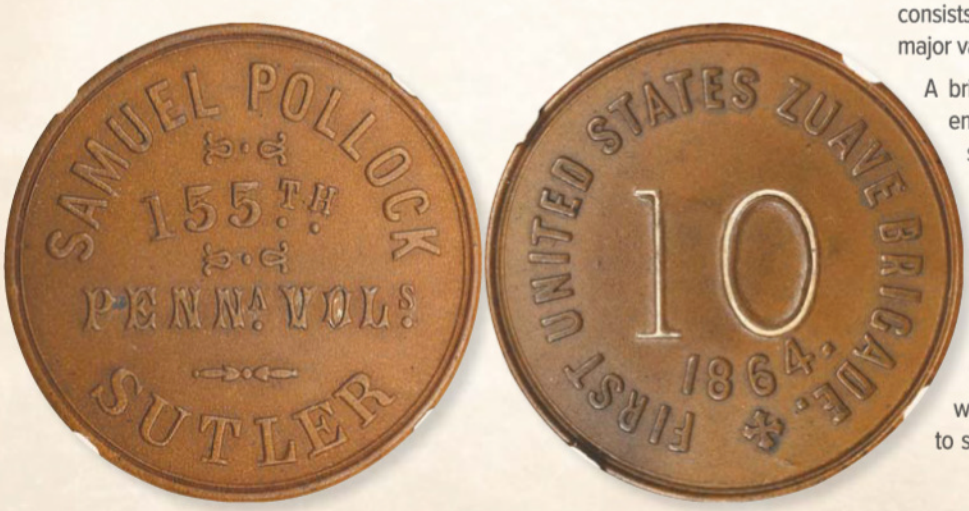
One of Kelly's favorite Sutler tokens in the collection is currently bid at $4,000. Per Kelly, the "US 117-50B C.H. Smith. 117th United States Colored Troops, a rare token from a regiment of Black soldiers."

As so often happens with collectors, Bill Kelly did not initially begin with a primary interest in Civil War Sutler tokens. Kelly had been collecting United States large cents when a friend offered him a duplicate Civil War Sutler Token. While interesting, the token was not in Kelly's main path and he passed on buying it, only to receive it as birthday present from his wife later. Apparently Kelly must have seemed enthusiastic enough when describing the incident to his wife that she decided to encourage this new avenue. It was a great bit of serendipity.



This C.W. Bangs 25 cents for the 6th Maine Battery struck in nickel is a Rarity-9 and catalogs as Schenkman ME-6-25N. Current bid is at $3,400 with one day to go.

Describing his journey Kelly said, "In the beginning, my goal was modest: to acquire one token from each state while continuing to build my large cent collection. But soon die varieties and die states of government minted coins seemed much less interesting than tokens made for and used by Civil War soldiers. These tokens touched 19th century America in ways that coins and other tokens did not. Today, my large cents are long gone, and my Sutler token collection consists of 142 pieces, including 113 major varieties."



The Schenkman Plate piece, an extremely rare 1st U.S. Zouaves 10 cents of Samuel Pollock for the 155th Pennsylvania Volunteers, is bid at $3,800 one day before closing.

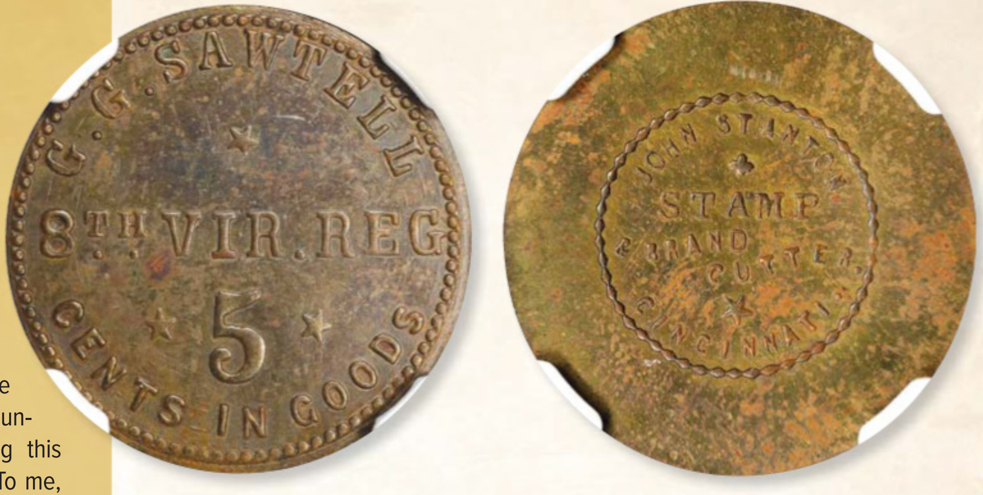
A brief description of the phenomenon of Civil War Sutlers is presented by Chris Bulfinch on the Stack's Bowers Galleries website. Bulfinch explains, "Sutlers were a fixture of many soldiers' camps and forts and towns near battlefields during the American Civil War. These merchants sold a wide range of wares to soldiers, from necessities to small luxuries. To facilitate transactions, Sutlers issued simple tokens made from base metal or cardboard to soldiers to whom they had extended credit."

Kelly's collection is one of the largest ever and offers a wide-angle look at these tokens use during a crucial period in our country's history. Effectively, building this collection changed Kelly's life: "To me, these Sutler tokens represent real connections to our collective past. And chasing and studying these pieces of our history have become significant parts of my history."

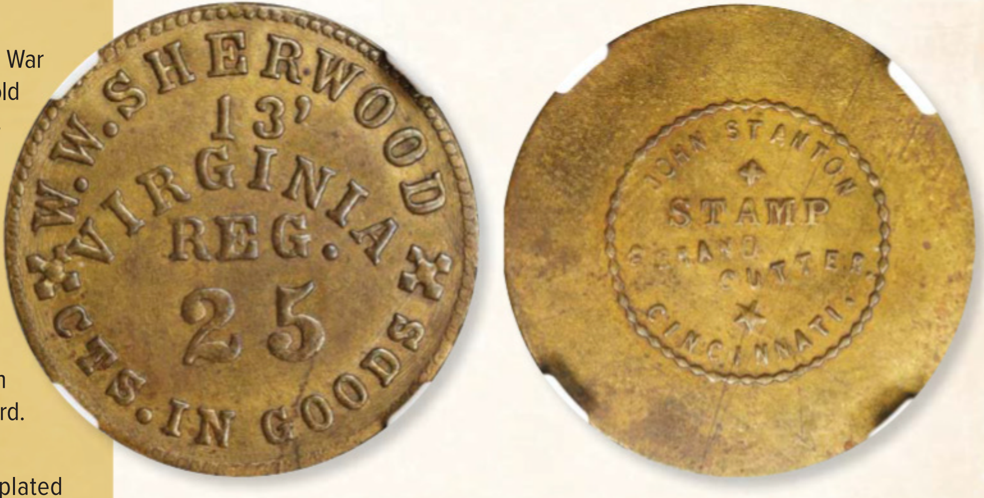
The Bill Kelly Collection of Civil War Sutler Tokens was set to be sold on June 13 through Stack's Bowers Galleries. As detailed by Kelly, "The collection includes all 14 major varieties from Pennsylvania, 15 of 18 from Illinois, 8 of 9 from New York, and 11 of 13 from Virginia. Several tokens are truly rare. Several are the best known on either the NGC or PCGS scoreboard. Some are both."

Many of Kelly's tokens are plated in one or both editions of the primary reference for this field, David Schenkman's Civil War Sutler Tokens and Cardboard Scrip. As for provenance, many tokens in Kelly's collection have passed through other classic collectors' hands, such as the late Stephen Tanenbaum or through auctions by the primary specialist in civil war tokens, Steve Hayden.

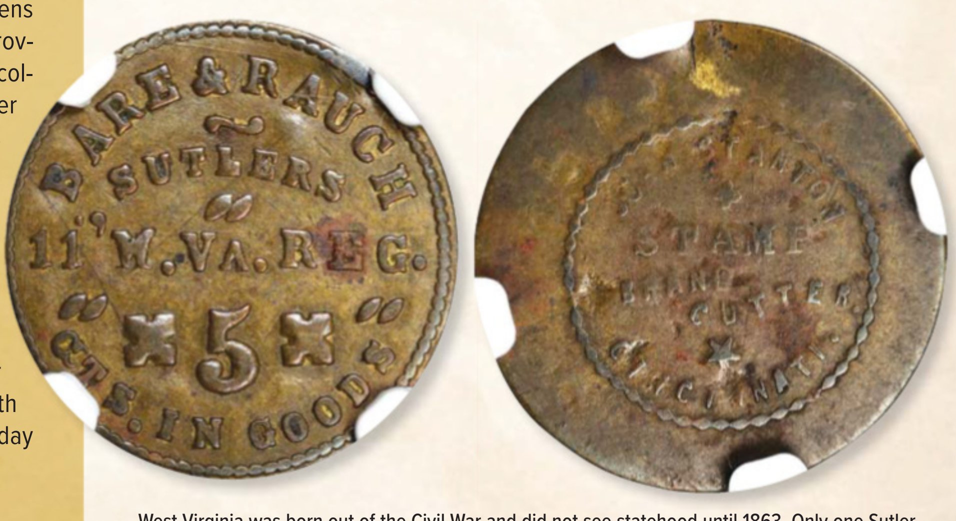
Nearing the closing date at the time of writing, the following are some of the most fought-for tokens in Kelly's collection, with some of the highest bids, just a day before the closing. ◆



A 5 cents G.G. Sawtell token for the 8th Virginia Regiment, Rarity-9 and graded NGC MS-60 is bid at $1,400. From Stack's Bowers catalog description, "Sawtell was the Sutler for the Virginia 8th, and then the Virginia 15th. The same tokens were circulated in both regiments, but those for the 15th were counterstamped '15' over the 8 on these tokens."



Currently bid at $3,000, this W.W. Sherwood token for the 13th Virginia Regiment is denominated 25 cents and is a Rarity-9, as are all tokens from this issuer. Sherwood tokens of any denomination were missing from the Ford Collection and do not appear in the Hayden archives.



West Virginia was born out of the Civil War and did not see statehood until 1863. Only one Sutler, Bare & Rauch, is known to have issued tokens for a regiment of this state. This is one of the hardest states to represent in a Sutler token collection. Most collections are simply missing West Virginia. The Kelly example is a 5 cents with some damage, yet very presentable and currently bid at $1,400, though I would expect it to go much higher.

Why Should You Learn to Grade for Yourself?

BY MIKE THORNE, PH.D.

In the history of the numismatic market, one of the main topics has always been coin grading. Defined as a label to describe the condition of the coin, a coin's grade is inseparably intertwined with its value. Coins of the same rarity with lower grades are worth less than coins that qualify for higher grades.

Many years ago, controversial psychologist William Sheldon introduced a numbering system for different coin grades. With a scale from 1 (basal state) to 70 (top-of-the-line Mint State), the numbers were based on U.S. large cents and were supposed to be directly related to the value of a particular coin. That is, a coin worth $1 in its basal state would be worth $8 in Very Good condition or $60 in the lowest Mint-State grade.

Although the scale as such probably wasn't even applicable to large cents when Sheldon proposed it, the scale numbers have been applied to coin grades since the American Numismatic Association adopted Sheldon's scale in the 1970s. The ANA also increased the Sheldon numbers well beyond those proposed in 1958's Penny Whimsy, which was a revision of 1949's Early American Cents.

As an illustration of this expansion of the numbers, Sheldon used two numbers for the grade of Very Fine, 20 and 30. Today's version has four numbers: 20, 25, 30 and 35. Whereas Sheldon had only one number for a coin deemed to be About Uncirculated (50), grading services today recognize four numbers (50, 53, 55, 58).

An even more extreme illustration lies in the designation of Mint State. For Sheldon, there were only three numbers: 60, 65, and 70. Graders today apply all whole numbers between 60 and 70.

At this point, you might ask, "Why are the additional numbers needed?" The answer has to do with coin values. For example, consider a specific rare coin that's valued at $1,000 in just-made-the-grade MS-60 and $5,000 in MS-65. What about a piece that's obviously better than MS-60 but doesn't quite reach the MS-65 grade. What's it going to be worth?

It's obviously going to be worth more than $1,000 and less than $5,000. But how much more or less? With the different in-between grades, you can cover the spread in values, and a coin in MS-64 can have a value of $4,000, an MS-63 a value of $3,000, and so on.

With this brief introduction to numerical grading, it's now time to consider the title question: Why should you learn to grade for yourself?

Although it's hard to believe, back before the beginning of the major grading services (ANACS, NGC, PCGS), coins at a coin show were typically found in 2x2 holders or 2x2 brown paper envelopes with the dealer's grade plainly marked on the holder. This was a grade that used adjectives to describe it such as Very Good or Very Fine or Gem Uncirculated. Sometimes pluses were added if the dealer thought the coin was particularly nice for the grade.

Some dealers applied grades that could best be described as optimistic. That is, the coin in reality might be a grade or two (or more) below the grade indicated on the holder. In addition, many coins had serious problems (cleaning, damage, whizzing) not described on the holder.

As a footnote to this, I encountered one dealer at a show who had all of his coins priced but ungraded. His response when I questioned this? "I grade it $25 or $50 or whatever the price is. You can supply your own grade." For this dealer, you would obviously need to know how to grade for yourself so that you could see if his price corresponded to the grade you had in mind.

Nowadays, many of the coins you'll see at a show are certified for grade. Some PCGS and NGC coins may even have CAC (green bean) stickers. CAC stands for Certified Acceptance Corporation, a company that for a fee evaluates NGC- or PCGS-graded coins to determine if they are solid or high-end for their grades. If so, they have a green, tamper-evident holographic sticker attached to their holders.

If you submit a coin and it does not earn a green bean, it doesn't mean that the coin is incorrectly graded. It just means that it didn't have enough quality in CAC's opinion to merit receiving a green bean.

Of course, coins in ANACS, NGC, or PCGS slabs aren't the only certified coins you'll see at a coin show. Other certification services, such as ICG (Independent Coin Graders) have their adherents.

At this point, you are probably thinking that if all the coins you're interested in are certified by a major service, you can be sure they're correctly graded. Unfortunately, this is not always true. Although the major services provide a great service and assign accurate grades most of the time, sometimes the grades are not what they should be.

Although it's not common, I've found there are certified coins that are under-graded, just as there are over-graded coins. As I'm writing this, on eBay there is an AG-3 NGC-graded 1916-D Mercury dime. In my opinion, the coin might qualify for a G-4 grade if removed from its holder and submitted again to NGC or to another service. In fact, it's got more detail on the reverse than a 1916-D NGC G-4 that Heritage sold at auction recently for $960, which is the wholesale value for the date in G-4. If I hadn't just bought a new car, I might buy the coin on eBay.

My point here is that if you know how to grade for yourself, you can spot certified coins that are either over-graded or under-graded. In fact, I've read there are some coin dealers who make a good living playing what they call the "crackout game." That is, they look for coins that are clearly under-graded, buy them, crack them out of their slabs, and resubmit them to either the same or a different service.

Even if the eBay coin didn't receive a higher grade, I'm almost certain that it would qualify for a green bean, which would increase its value, according to what I've read. The current wholesale value for the 1916-D in AG-3 is $660, whereas it's worth $792 with a CAC sticker.

In my opinion, you can't entirely trust third-party grading, even by the big three services. In addition to certified coins that might be somewhat over-graded, there are some accurately graded certified coins that are just plain ugly. Perhaps they have mottled toning that no one likes. I once made the mistake of bidding on a coin in an auction whose pictures I hadn't seen. I don't know how that happened, but when I did look at the pictures I saw that the coin had overall toning that was virtually black!

Needless to say, no one else wanted that dog of a coin, and my bid was the winner. I don't know why I didn't return the coin. Perhaps I felt that my oversight needed to be punished. I've repressed how much I lost on the coin when I sold it to a dealer, but I'm sure it was a substantial amount.

Although there are some dealers who only sell certified coins, you'll find that many dealers still buy and sell uncertified (raw) coins. Many coins' values are not high enough to justify the effort and cost of their certification. Into this category, you can put most all circulated U.S. coins minted after about 1940. Most base metal foreign coins fall into this group as well.

Some collectors even pride themselves on not owning any certified coins. If you're one of these collectors or just a collector of inexpensive material with a smattering of slabs you've picked up here and there, then you definitely should learn to grade for yourself.

But how do you go about learning to grade? Cited in the ANA's Grading Standards for United States Coins, Ken Bressett of Red Book (Guide Book of United States Coins) fame listed four things needed to learn how to grade coins: (1) a good magnifying glass, (2) a good light, (3) a good memory, and (4) 20 years of experience. In other words, you're not going to teach yourself how to be an accurate grader overnight. You're going to have to look at coins in different grades, study and remember their characteristics, and read all you can about the grading process.

The reading part obviously involves the purchase of some grading guides. In addition to the ANA guide I cited earlier, I have in my numismatic library Q. David Bowers' Grading Coins by Photographs (2nd edition), the PCGS' Official Guide to Coin

Grading and Counterfeit Detection, and the third edition of Coin World's Making the Grade. Of historical interest are my copies of Brown and Dunn's A Guide to the Grading of United States Coins (5th edition), James L. Halperin's How to Grade U.S. Coins and James F. Ruddy's New Photograde (17th edition). New Photograde wasn't actually in its 17th edition. It was really just the 17th printing. Halperin's book focused on grading uncirculated and proof coins, so it wasn't nearly as comprehensive as the others I listed.

Looking up these books online, I learned there are new editions available of some of them. Obviously, you don't need all of the guides that I listed in order to learn how to grade U.S. coins. Three that I would recommend are the ANA guide (7th edition), Bowers' Grading Coins by Photographs (2nd edition), and Making the Grade.

Both the ANA guide and Grading Coins by Photographs are available on either Amazon or eBay for reasonable prices, but I was aghast at the price for Making the Grade. On eBay, a new copy is listed at $49.97 plus $7.50 shipping, whereas on Amazon a new copy will set you back at least $99.95. There are also seven used copies for $99.95 and up.

At this point, let's assume that you've purchased one or more grading guides and committed them to memory. Just joking, of course. I suspect that none or few of my readers have photographic memories.

After you've obtained a book on grading U.S. coins such as the ANA guide, it's a good idea to read through the introductory material. Here you will find a lot of useful information.

One piece of advice is to "Pick a series that is popular and for which many 'slabbed' examples can be found in dealers' shops and at coin shows." Of course, if you live in a relatively rural area like I do, there are probably no shops or shows coming to your area.

I agree that you should concentrate on a single series at first, learning to grade it the old-fashioned way, by comparing coins that are available with the pictures and descriptions in the guide. If you start like I did, it'll be the Lincoln cent series that you choose.

Concentrating on the Lincoln cents before 1959, the Wheaties (those with wheat stalks on the reverse), buy a few rolls of mixed dates on eBay. You'll want rolls of early dates (pre-1940) and a few rolls of Lincolns in the 1940s and 1950s. Assume that these are "educational" rolls, and don't expect to find anything valuable. These will be part of your learning experience.

First, sort through the coins and take out any that are damaged, cleaned or otherwise unsightly. These are what I call "spenders" unless they happen to be scarce dates, which is exceedingly unlikely.

Next, sort the remaining coins into three piles: ones that are well worn, ones that are obviously worn but still retain major design characteristics and cents that have received little wear. You can refine the piles further using the pictured grades in the guide along with their verbal descriptions.

In grading these circulated Lincolns back in the '50s, the focus was on the wheat stalks. If a coin had no or almost no detail in the ends of the stalks, then it would be graded Good (G-4 or G-6). About half of the lines at the top of the stalks warranted a grade of Very Good (VG-8 or VG-10). A coin with virtually complete wheat lines merited a grade of Fine (F-12 or F-15). And on it went, with the coins showing progressively less wear and more detail for grades of VF and XF. An About Uncirculated (AU-50, -55, -58) coin might have a good bit of mint luster and wear only on the highest points of the coin (cheeks and jaw on the obverse, tops of the stalks on the reverse).

A penny with no wear on the high points and possibly full mint luster will merit an Uncirculated grade (Mint State 60-70). Chances are good that you won't find many of these in your eBay purchases. Marks or blemishes on the coin will determine which Mint State grade it receives. As you would expect, the greater the number of defects, the lower the MS grade.

To check your grading results, look on eBay at certified examples of the same date and mintmark. If your coin matches a certified example of the same grade, you're learning how to grade Lincoln cents.

When you feel comfortable grading Lincolns, you can move on to another denomination with easily obtainable circulated and uncirculated examples. Jefferson nickels were hot when I was doing a lot of my roll searching. Without going into further detail about them, it should be fairly easy and inexpensive to secure coins that you can use to develop your grading skills. Once again, you can compare your decisions with those of professional graders by looking at certified coins on eBay.

Alternatively, you can find examples of virtually every date and grade in the Heritage Auctions archives (HA.com). At the time I'm writing this, nearly 3 million coins exist in the archives.

Another worthwhile source of auction results can be found at www.pcgs.com/auctionprices. This site appears to be an excellent place to look at dramatic enlargements of coins in Mint State grades. Similarly, you can find more of the same types of photographic enlargements of certified coins on the NGC website (www.ngccoin.com/auction-central/us).

Of course, if you live in a city with coin shops and the occasional coin show, then you should be able to study both certified and raw coins to your heart's content.

In this short piece on the need to learn to grade for yourself, I haven't touched on any of the nuances of grading. One of these has to do with the quality of the strike on some coins in many series. For example, on page 118 of the 6th edition of the ANA grading guide you'll find notes about Buffalo nickels that begin, "Often Buffalo nickels were weakly struck, and lack details even on Uncirculated examples." A lengthy list of such nickels follows, and there's a sentence that reads, "Nickels dated 1919-S, 1920-S, 1923-S, 1925-S, and especially 1926-D are seldom found with full details."

I note this because a dealer once showed me an original roll of 1926-D nickels, each coin with blazing mint luster. The coins were beautiful but were so weakly struck that the extent of the horn on the buffalo would have placed them in the VG category!

If you stick with inexpensive raw coins, then grading skills won't be terribly important for preventing you from making a costly mistake. However, if you plan to pursue scarce and expensive coins, particularly coins in high grades, then having some grading skills will be well worth your time and effort.

I believe that most collectors can learn to grade coins on their own, and with diligent and dedicated study, it may not take 20 years to become proficient. And there's always more to learn. After more than 65 years of exposure to both common and rare coins, I don't pretend to know it all.

But I'm still studying! ◆

Basics and Beyond

BY MIKE THORNE, PH.D.

Counterfeit 1955 Doubled Die Lincoln Cent

I spotted an interesting (and scary) thread on CoinTalk (CT) recently. The original poster (OP), a new member, wrote: "So I came across a listing online for a 1955 doubled die penny, and it seemed too good to be true." The last part of the sentence alone is a huge red flag. If something seems too good to be true, it almost certainly is not true.

The OP continued: "I did a quick Google search and it turns out you can buy them from China now? How in the world is someone supposed to tell what is real anymore? These fakes all look very real to me." He then posted links to the coin's obverse and reverse and asked, "Do you guys think it is real?"

As someone who got his start collecting Lincoln cents in the 1950s and has been looking at them fondly for the last 70-plus years, the pictured coin looked like some giant copies of coins I've accumulated over the years. For openers, the color looked wrong and there was something about Lincoln's face that just wasn't right. As one poster put it, "Well, it does say copy and Abe looks like a sleep-eyed dude from Omaha."

To this comment, the OP argued, "The 'copy' is just a photoshop [addition] to probably comply with legal requirements for listing online, but I'm sure other vendors are out there selling them openly. Did you see the photos of the listing I posted? Do you think it's a real coin or a copy?"

At this point, I would have been tempted to add that the coin is a real copy, but another poster wrote, "No. It's fake. Nothing about it looks real."

The OP's next comment was most informative. "For what it's worth, the seller is asking $250 for it. So that was a sort of red flag for me."

Red flag? You would have to have a time machine and go back many years to be able to touch a genuine 1955 doubled die Lincoln cent for $250. The "coin" appeared to be uncirculated, and if it were genuine, the PCGS value in MS-60 is almost $3,000. $250 is not a red flag, it's a full-on tsunami of fakery!

Next, the OP wrote: "I guess it was news to me, but I just didn't know they had started faking our pennies now. The seller also has this 1916-D dime, which I am guessing is also fake." To this, the reply was "Surely you jest. It's an out and out FAKO ..."

Another poster wrote, "Coins have been being faked for decades. [This probably should be for centuries or millennia.] This is not a new thing. There are a lot of Chinese counterfeits that have been made of American coins, from pennies to dollars. [And also gold coins.] That is not a very good fake IMO, and Abe's face and hair are clear signs of it not being genuine. Also, the website says it's a copy in the title, so you can't blame the seller."

Another poster uploaded photographic enlargements of a genuine 1955 doubled die cent from his personal collection. Referring to his own coin, he wrote, "Lincoln's bust and the area where the letters overlap are easy to see the difference."

A well-known CT member posted the following information: "That counterfeit of the 1955 doubled die cent has been around for quite awhile. I added it to my virtual 'black cabinet' of counterfeit coins years ago. If you see a picture of it straight on instead of at an angle, it's more obvious. Bad photography and pictures shot at an angle are the stock in trade of counterfeit coin sellers. When you see that for a [possible] purchase, turn the page. Don't even consider buying it."

The next post was a picture of the obverse of what appeared at first glance to be a gem 1955 doubled die with full mint red color. The reverse shows something else, however. At the top are the words "GROVE MINTING COMPANY" and below this is a large shield with greenery around it. At the bottom is "MMXXI." The poster explained, "Grove Minting has a very realistic obverse but paired with a custom reverse." You can buy Grove Minting's coin for $28 plus $6 shipping.

The next poster gave a brief history of the 1955 doubled die counterfeits. "I was lucky enough," he wrote, "to get in on the ground floor of Third-Party coin authentication in this country so I've seen a few counterfeits over the years."

"The 1955/55 is an expensive coin. By the 1960s a much better counterfeit (published in 1963) than the one in the OP existed. For some perspective, [the OP's] example would not have fooled any coin dealer back then, while the better made fake of the time was deceptive enough to fool most dealers. By the 1970s there were two or three very deceptive fakes of these coins in the market. The ANA's certification service published one of them in the 1980s. If I remember [correctly], it is the one with a tiny curved 'spur' coming off the top of one of the 5s.

In my opinion, anyone who has a genuine cent made between 1950 and 1957 in AU condition would see that the coin in the OP looks much different – nothing like it should. The key to avoiding counterfeits is a simple one: Know what a genuine example looks like. That way, even for an experienced professional, you still may not know if a coin is authentic or not but you know it looks different than it should and that's the 'red flag' we all look for."

The next poster seconded the comment about knowing what a genuine coin looks like. "This is your first line of defense," he wrote. "Unfortunately, the notion of making a big score overcomes all rationality for a lot of people, which is why counterfeiting [valuable coins] thrives. Your second line of defense is that the coin you posted looks like garbage, which it is. Trust your instincts."

I'm surprised that none of the respondents to this thread mentioned certification. There is no way that I would buy a coin like the 1955 doubled die Lincoln that wasn't certified by one of the main services (ANACS, NGC, PCGS).

Of course, there are now counterfeits out of China of both the coins and the slabs, but that's a topic for another column. ◆

modern issues that I pass around during my Youth Presentations on the Morgan/Peace dollars at my local coin club.

Lorne Lavertu
Herndon, Va.

No. Personally I feel they are overpriced. The Mint should have made a few-thousand more of them.

Brian New
Address withheld

No, I don't. Not sure if these are legal tender for circulation and trade. I collect the original circulating issues of Morgan and Peace dollars and feel theses dollars are not a tribute but take away from the beauty and value of the originals.

Patricia Correia
Abilene, Texas

No, not for me. I'd rather spend whatever they're going to sell for on 100-plus year old type coins.

Joe G.
Carlsbad, Calif.

I plan on buying them for my collection as I have been collecting them for many years, so why stop now. I am thrilled.

Dominic Cantore
Chicago, Ill.

I do plan on purchasing the 2023 Morgan and Peace dollars. I already have them as part of my subscriptions from the Mint and will have them graded and encapsulated. I have been collecting for 50 years and find these two dollars some of the most beautiful and historic coins ever produced by the U.S. Mint. This is really a great opportunity to have these coins in great uncirculated condition as well as being as close as possible to the originals.

Denny Watson
St. Charles, Missouri

I have no intention to buy the commemorative Morgan and Peace dollars. I don't normally buy commemoratives in the first place unless they have special meaning to me. There has been a proliferation in commemorative coinage worse than the abuses of the classic commemoratives to the extent that commemorative coins are being issued for less-than-historic reasons. When we get to the point that we're issuing commemoratives to commemorate coins, the program has gone too far! These coins were first issued two years ago to commemorate the centennial of the last Morgan and first Peace dollars, but now they're trying to make them annual issues. We have too many commemoratives already. We don't need more so the U.S. Mint can further gouge the collector with its overpriced products.

Louis Iudiciani
Cumberland, R.I.

Yes, I will buy a few of each, although with the increased proof and unc. mintages, I doubt they will increase much above offering value. However, there are few coins prettier than the Morgan dollar, so I look forward to owning some.

Mike G.
Hernando, Miss.

No, I spent several hours in 2021 trying to get a confirmed sale of the Morgan dollars on the Mint website and I was unsuccessful. Then, initially, I had subscribed to all the 2023 Morgan dollar products, but when the Mint devalued the Morgans by raising mintages, I cancelled all my subscriptions and will not be buying, owning or trading for these items in the future.

Matt Bernau
Address withheld

I am not buying the 2023 Morgan and Peace dollars. This is just more U.S. Mint market manipulation by creating artificial scarcity. I'm not participating.

Kellie Matthews
New Freedom, Pa.

I will buy an example of every new Morgan and Peace dollar. I'm looking forward to a yearly collectible like the [American silver Eagle]. I buy every silver dollar the Mint puts out.

Donald
New Mexico

I do not plan to buy any of the uncirculated Morgan and Peace dollars when they become available. I am interested in the original Morgan dollar series because of the issues the mints had producing them and the many different varieties available. A modern-minted silver dollar would be unlikely to have many production issues creating unintentional varieties.

Gary Becker
Endicott, N.Y.

Absolutely. The Morgan is a popular favorite in the world of numismatics. Wish the Mint wouldn't have skipped 2022.

Tim Graves
Cumberland,MD

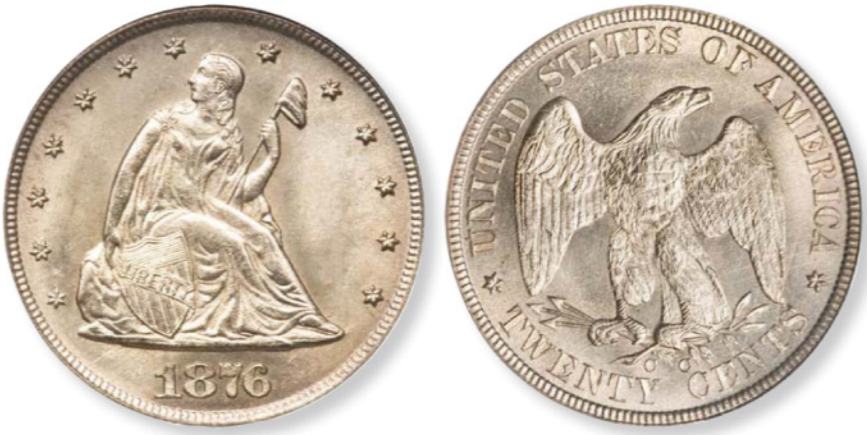
Carson City Struck Its Last 20-Cent Piece in 1876

For the branch mint facility in Carson City, Nev., every year of operation was probably an interesting one, but 1876 was more interesting than most. The results of that fascinating year are some of the most interesting of all American rarities.

Simply having a Carson City mint had been something of a struggle. The great silver deposits in the region had been known for decades, so a branch mint there was natural – but there was a Civil War, so it took until 1866 for the facility to be established. Its first coins emerged in 1870.

Over the years, coins from Carson City have taken on a special allure as coins associated with the Old West. To own a “CC” coin is to own a piece of the Old West, created under primitive conditions in a place forever carved into the annals of the American history. On top of that, the production levels at Carson City were never high.

In 1876 the nation was celebrating its centennial. It was a year of special events. There were probably some festivities in Carson City, but it was a long way from places like Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia. Yet, apparently at least one special thing happened at Carson City: one, and apparently only one, proof 1876-CC dime was produced, despite production of 8,270,000 regular-strike Seated Liberty dimes. The reason for the 1876-CC proof dime is unknown, but it was not the only significant coin to emerge from Carson City that year.



1876-CC 20-cent piece.
(Images courtesy usacoinbook.com.)

In 1876, Carson City was in the second year (and in fact the last year in terms of circulation strikes) of what might be described as the 20-cent experiment. The 20-cent coin had been simply one in a long series of desperate efforts to use more silver in coinage.

No one really wanted a 20-cent coin, with the exception of a few political figures and silver mine owners. Officials compounded the problems of the unwanted denomination by making it similar in design and size to the quarter.

The 20-cent piece was launched with relatively little attention, and things seemed to go downhill from there. Production in that first year of 1875 was over 1 million pieces in San Francisco, over 133,000 in Carson City and over 36,000 in Philadelphia. No one liked the coin, and complaints of confusion with the quarter came quickly.

It was almost surprising that the 20-cent piece was even produced in 1876. But you could barely call what took place “production.” Philadelphia struck a total of 14,640 pieces for circulation. San Francisco did not produce any, and at Carson City the total stood at 10,000. An order to halt production of the coin actually stopped production of additional 1876-CC 20-cent pieces.

A significant number of the 10,000-piece 1876-CC 20-cent piece production sat in vaults in Carson City, and destruction of those pieces was ordered later. It is not known how many 1876-CC 20-cent pieces were destroyed, but considering its rarity today, it very probably was most of those 10,000.

The total number of surviving 1876- CC 20-cent pieces is believed to be under 20. They are interesting coins, not only in their rarity but also the fact that all were produced from a doubled obverse die, which is most evident when you examine the word “LIBERTY.”

The 1876-CC 20-cent piece is a rarity – they are virtually unknown in upper grades. Any 1876-CC coin, however, is a real treasure and makes for an interesting story.
